SATURDAY, MARCH 6, 1886

"We admit," says the Advertiser, "that our morning contemporary has made a point against us in our statement of the total percentage of domestic exports for the past two months; but a mere error in the statement of percentages does not weaken the force of our argument." Logically this is equivalent to the Advertiser saying: "We admit that our morning contemporary has knocked the bottom out of our premise, but that mere fact does not weaken the conclusion of our argument, that the Reciprocity Treaty is being menaced by local discrimination against American shipping." You had better "watch sharp," gentle organ, or the "fool-killer" will hit you between the eyes again.

SOMETHING over two years ago a lot of ancient manuscripts were discovered in Egypt and were brought to Europe by the Archduke Renier. This collection of valuable manuscripts is known to scholars under the collective title of Corpus Papyrorum Raineri Archiducis. Word now comes to the civilized world, through a correspondent of the London Times, that among the collection, a fragment of the New Testament has been found, containing a chapter "Which differs from St. Matthew, chapter xxvi, verses 30 to 34, and from St. Mark, chapter xiv, verses 26 to 30, more than these Evangelists differ from each other." The Times' correspondent further states that this fragment seems to have been written in the Third century, although, if it is judged by the style, it might be placed as far back as the First century. Dr. Bickell is of the opinion that "the fragment must be the copy of a manuscript, older than those from which the accepted versions of St. Matthew and St. Mark have been taken." The question is still unsettled, however, and Professor Karabacek of Vienna is now studying the manuscript, a fac-simile of which will be published.

WE are willing to admit that the Advertiser is "very reluctant to speak harshly of the present detective staff," as we are also willing to admit that the gentle organ is "very reluctant to speak harshly of anything or anybody connected with the Government. Since our morning contemporary has been so kind as to admit it was wrong about discriminations being made here against American shipping, we are also willing to admit the justice of its editorial of yesterday morning on the "Prevalent Lawlessness and the Police," as far as it went, but we object that it did not go, logically, far enough. There is also somewhat of humor in the following sally: "It appears to us, however, that it is about time there should come a change of some kind—either that the thieves should steal the police or that the police should detect and arrest some of the thieves." It would be difficult to discover, however, what the thieves would want to steal the police for—thieves are not in the habit of stealing native opala, as their late operations show. But joking aside, who is responsible for the "prevalent lawlessness and the insufficiency of the police"? There is but one answer and that is that the present Administration is responsible, both in law and in fact. If the present Administration is charged with the responsibility the stereotyped answer of "no funds" will be returned. But who is responsible for there being a lack of money to properly run the Government? Why, the present Administration, of course, who started with funds in the Treasury. The Advertiser will coolly inform the public, as it has in the past, that the Opposition is responsible for all the evils that Hawaii is heir to, by standing directly in the way of the "party of progress," which is advancing the interests of its leaders by running the country into debt. What the tax-payers want is a practical Government for the people, and it is what they will have in the end.

THEY CRY IN VAIN!

Editor Daily Honolulu Press.

SIR: Thursday evening last about eight o'clock people in the neighborhood of Punchbowl and Queen streets were startled by the terrific screams of a woman for assistance. Parties at once rushed for the place whence the distressing cries arose, but the police, unless it was a special who seemed to do as he was unacquainted with the native language, were nowhere to be seen or heard. After some minutes, when quietness was again resumed, a native policeman came, but instead of making investigations into the matter, he joined a group of natives not far distant and seemed to join in the merriment occasioned by the witticisms of the crowd, and on being requested to do something in the matter muttered some contemptuous answer.

While we have such a police force, is it a wonder that robberies and burglaries are committed with impunity and the perpetrators are seldom if ever apprehended?

The cause of the disturbance was a wife being beaten by a brutal husband, who is supposed to be receiving treatment in the hospital, but who comes out regularly under the shades of night to revel and drink awa. The outraged wife heard of this, and upon last Tuesday night surprised her shameless husband in shameless company. Being detected in his inconstancy he sought to retaliate by beating her, which it seems he did to his heart's content, and which I am thinking he could be doing up to the time of this going to press as far as the police are concerned.

Willing to give the "Devil his due," I must say that the Advertiser, contrary to its usual practice, intimated pretty plainly what appears to be the truth in this morning's issue, that the thieves have stolen the police, or most of them, for I must admit there are a few exceptionally good men on the force. But they are so few that they are powerless.

WITNESS,
Honolulu, March 5, 1886.

The Latest Case of "Move On."

Evictions of Poles from Prussia excite very little remark from the rest of the world, but they are in some respects even greater cruelties than the evictions of Irish tenants. The dispossessed tenant in the worst days was not compelled to leave Ireland; he might find shelter in another county or "townland," although other tenants of the same or neighboring landlords were forbidden to offer him roof or potatoes. That part of the Polish population ordered to quit Prussia is absolutely turned out of the Prussian territory. Prince Bismarck, when called to explain, shuffles and pretends that the evicted Poles, who are, many of them, Jews, are "impossible" as Prussian subjects. A large proportion of the Poles in Posen are Roman Catholics, but it does not yet appear that these have to go. One account describes the wholesale eviction of 35,700 persons, shopkeepers, farmers and their families, without regard to the common decencies of humanity. Families where a child had died in the morning of the eviction were compelled to bury it at once, then and there, and to set out on their journey to the frontier as though nothing had happened. Women whose only fit place was the sick-bed were driven along on the same cruel march. It did not even seem to be clearly explained to them where they were to go, except to "get out" of Prussia; and it is said that numbers of them are hovering on the borders of Russia, which country also shuts them out. Austria, to its credit, has made no move toward expelling what Bismarck calls the "impossibles."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Illustrating the Liquor Question.

Two colored barbers, one an old man and the other a young man. The young one took off his apron and started out of the door. "Yo's gwan to get a drink, Jim?" asked the elder. "Dat's what I see gwan to do." "Go and get yo' drink. I yoost to do de same ting when I wuz young. When I wuz fust married dah wuz a gin mill next door to de shop wha' I wucked, an' I spent in it fifty and seventy cents a day outen de dollar an' a half I earned. Well, one mawnin' I went into de butcher shop an' who would come in but de man wha' kept de likker shop. "Gib me ten pounds po'terhouse steak," he said. "He got it and went out. I sneaked up to de butcher and looked to see what money I had left." "What do you want?" said the butcher. "Gib me ten cents wuf of likker," wuz my remark. "It wuz all I could pay fur. Now you go an' git yo' drink. You'll eat likker, but de man wat sells yo' de stuff will hab his po'terhouse steak. De man behind de bar eats po'terhouse—de man in front eats likker. I ain't teched de stuff in thirty years, an' I am eatin' po'terhouse myself."—Buffalo Express.

Mr. Oldbeau (to young rival, before young lady to whom they are both attentive)—Why, bless me, Charley, how you've grown!—Harper's Bazar.
